Welcome to CD-i

CD-i: The Future is now

Welcome to the rich new world of Compact Disc-Interactive - the stunning new force in entertainment, information and learning.

Though CD-i has only been on sale for a very short time it's making a big impact. To those in the know that comes as no surprise; the system has vast potential to carry it through the '90s - and beyond.

The CD-i Magazine will chart that potential as it unfolds.

It's the first publication dedicated to the system and we hope to convey something of the excitement CD-i holds.

Our aims are simple: to keep you informed of the latest CD-i developments in an entertaining and dynamic way.

We'll keep you up to speed on new machines and the latest titles, give hints on how to get the best out of CD-i and lift the veil on some of tomorrow's system secrets.

And there'll be some pretty special offers for our readers.

CD-i IS the future - welcome to it!

CD-i takes UK by storm!

Compact Disc-Interactive is proving a major hit with the British public.

Following CD-i's successful American introduction late last year, UK customers got their first chance to experience the system with the launch of Philips CDI 205 player in May.

Since then there's been no looking back with CD-i set to take off even faster than Compact Disc.

And that's no mean achievement considering the uniqueness of the CD-i concept. Its stunning mix of audio, video, graphics, animation and stills - all under your own interactive control - simply has no precedent.

But once people see it, they're hooked. Quite simply, CD-i is addictive.

And the drug doesn't wear off.
Independent research shows that within a few weeks the average buyer has a library of around nine CD-i titles and a typical family uses the player for an incredible 40 hours per week. That's more time than many people spend actually watching TV!

They're also absolutely delighted with the product, with over 70 per cent of buyers saying they are 'very satisfied' with the system.

And these aren't 'rich kids' with time on their hands- they're ordinary people with average incomes. In fact, typical mass-market consumers.

That's the key to CD-i's success - getting as many players as possible into people's homes quickly. Then we'll see the all-important title catalogue grow even more dramatically.

CD-i now has over 50 titles available and there are new releases every month. And by the end of next year there could be as many as 500 on sale - including films and interactive movies.

If you've already bought a CD-i machine, well done; you're at the forefront of this decade's most exciting new technology.

If you're thinking of buying one, don't wait. You'll find the experience fascinating.

But be warned - the CD-i habit is likely to cost you a good deal of sleep!

Full Motion Video - the CD-i feature that puts movies on CD - is now just round the corner.

From the end of 1992, the first FMV cartridges will become available and by early 1993, these upgrade kits will be on sale along with the first FMV titles.

FMV allows up to 72 minutes of fully digital video to be stored on a single CD-i disc and the quality goal is to make the pictures as good as S-VHS.

The slot-in cartridge fits neatly into the back of the current CD-i players so that you can decide when you want to add this new feature.

FMV will not only add CD-i movies to your library but also you can expect pop music videos, karaoke and super, interactive film-enhanced games - even more realistic.

We must now wait to see what the title developers produce using the FMV facility. Yes, conventional films will appear on disc; but imagine controlling a 'real' Humpbrey Bogart in a totally interactive movie.

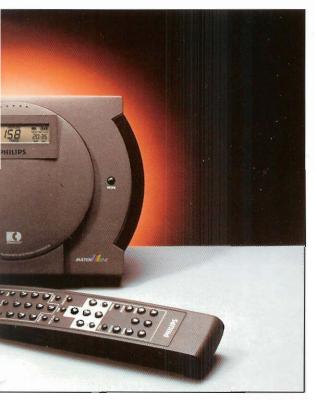

Mind-boggling - but entirely feasible.

hoto CD discs will of course run on CD-i machines as well as the new dedicated Photo CD players recently launched by Philips - two home decks and a transportable player.

Plug them - or a CD-i player - into your TV set and the family album takes on a whole new dimension. There - on screen - are your own shots, with a vividness never before imagined. And it's possible to zoom in on your favourite bit of the picture and enlarge it to full screen.

It's perfect for keeping those special moments for ever - CDs don't fade or wear out.

There will also be special interest prerecorded Photo CDs. And soon it will be possible to add your own soundtrack or commentary.

Getting your pictures onto Photo CD couldn't be simpler - just take your film into Boots or any other high street photo shop, and ask for the shots to be put on Photo CD. You can take the same disc back until 100 pictures are stored. The system will accept both 35mm print and slide film.

In the future you'll be able to add your own commentary or other soundtrack to enhance your TV 'slide show'.

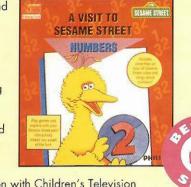

Just take your Photo CD disc home, put it in your CD-i or Photo CD player and see your photos in superb quality on your own TV - stunning!

The CD that talks back!

Reprinted from WHAT HI-FI Supplement September 1992

The UK's first CD-i player is a Philips' CD-i 205. In August we reviewed it – now we turn it over to three interested parties to put it to the test and give us their verdicts.

Colville Nursery

Perched on pint-sized stools gathered around the Philips CD-i player and a TV set, the children of the Colville Nursery in North London pointed wide-eyed at the colourful screen before them.

"What's that?" they said they'd seen computers and computer games before, but this was something a bit special. "Can we play with it?" said one little girl. "What's this?" asked another, her attention drawn to the yellow, red and blue Roller Controller, aimed specifically at junior users but apparently just as popular with those of us old enough to know better, and an optional extra at £50. Then as the player sprang into action, the room became silent, and all eyes fell on the screen. This would be a tough test for the CD-i player.

The school's nursery nurse Anne Rampersad was equally enthralled by Philips' CD-i player, and was soon pouring over a selection of children's discs. These included discs telling favourite children's stories, and words and numbers learning software from the makers of Sesane Street.

But did the CD-i player live up to their high expectations? Seame Street's numbers disc went down an absolute storm with the kids, said Rampersad, not only assisting the children with learning, but also helping to put them at ease with the machine's technology and operation. Computer literacy? "It's so important in this day and age," Rampersad said. The nursery caters for three to five year old children, and says Rampersad, the bottom line of their education should be making choices and beloing each other; which using the CD-i promotes.

Child's play the Philips CD-i player goes down a storm at a North London nursery school

CD-i selections

The range of discs, featuring animation, graphics and digital stereo sound, comes in the following categories. These are just some of the discs now available in each:

Children's A visit to Sesame Street - letters; Brer Rabbit and The Wonderful Tar Baby, Cartoon Jukebox, How the Camel got his Hump; Mother Goose Rhymes to Colour, Story Machine Magic Tales, Tell Me Why I; Paint School I

Games Battleship, Defender of the Crown; Text Tiles; The Palm Springs Open; Pin'ball; Backgammon; Caesar's World of Gambling; Connect 4

Music Classical Jukebox; Cool Oldies Jukebox; Golden Oldies Jukebox; Louis Amstrong; Pavarotti

Special Interest Rand McNally's America; US Atlas; Jigsaw; Time Life Photography; Treasures of the Sun (Vincent van Gogh); Renaissance of Florence "They talked all the time about how they would use the CD-i player. It helped them in their imaginative and exploratory play. They enjoyed it more than the computer because they could take it further," she said.

Now Rampersad wishes Colville had a CD-i player rather than their less interactive Apple Macintosh computer, not least because it survived the children's often enthusiastic use.

One of the player's biggest uses is likely to be in schools, and if the Colville Nursery's experience is anything to go by, the next generation of kirk will be learning from, and loving, CD-i.

The new system which produces this and a range of other challenges is called Compact Disc Interactive (CD-i). CD-i proved to be one of the biggest hits of the Daily Mail Ideal Home Plus Exhibition. So I enlisted my son and daughter - and together we tested it.

Like many modern children rhey are in contact with some kind of computer almost daily. Last year we brought John, aged nine, a Game Boy - a hand-held computer which offers a range of games to tackle on a riny black and white screen, and a favourite of Princess Diana's children.

We lost him for a time to the strange world of SuperMarioLand but once he learned the moves he craved more excitement. planet Janbarik, daughter Chrissy, 12, can wipe Janken The Great off the TV screen by firing from the hip at three paces.

But a Compact Disc Interactive system provides a television picture you can change.

First, the easy ones. Through the Cartoon Jukebox, for children aged three upwards, we select a picture of a red bus carrying passengers. Using a remote control we turn it into remote control we turn it into a yellow bus with a blue driver and pink passengers. The end result is animated to the music of The Wheels On The Bus.

With The Story Machine we start from scratch to conjure our own story using a hand-selected cast of heroes and villains, plus a range of scenes and useful objects. The fairy runs off with the lion and goes to live in the forest, as it turns out.

On Tell Me Why, a screen
encyclopedia for children aged seven to 14, Chrissy is finding out answers to all the things that parents can be too stupid or too busy to reveal: What is blood? Why does a fluorescent light take so long to come on? What ate falling stars? How do plants live? What are all the bits on a bee called?

More cautiously, I dabble in The Golden Oldies Jukebox. It plays songs in high-quality audio and puts a visual display on screen.

On the jukebox I select Woolly Bully (released in 1965 by Sam The Sham And The Pharoahs, it tells me). When the music plays, the lyrics come up on screen - thereby solving a puzzle which has troubled an entire generation for 27 years. So that's what it was all about.

Later I take an on-screen tour of treasures in the Smithsonian Institution. Using the controller to bring up the image I 'walk' around an object, zoom in on it and browse through the detailed notes.

The compact disc produces an image which is far more realistic than the usual 'flar' computer graphics. The golf, for instance, has real footage of some of the most famous holes in the world. Thousands of photographic stills are put together to form a continuous picture that looks like a piece of film footage.

There is already a wide range of adult and children's discs available but the potential for more is huge

Philips and Kodak are doing a deal which will enable family snapshots and other stills negatives to be put on CD and shown as images on screen.
Through links with film companies it may become possible to change the plots of some famous screen successes. Maybe Burch Cassidy and Sundance did escape at the end. Perhaps that Harry Lime chap wasn't so bad after all. Did Robin Hood and Marion ever all. Did Robin Hood and Marion ever marry? CD-i works through a compact disc player linked to a TV screen by an aerial plug or euro connector. The five-inch discs have 650-megabyte memories. The remote control 'zapper', similar to those used for TV, is fitted with a 'thumbstick' so that cursors or arrows can be moved around the screen. A keyboard can be artached if necessary, as can a spinning ball control for younger existing Compatibility with relevision hardware is no problem as Philips developed the system in partnership with Sony. Although it was launched in America, it was the brainchild of a Philips research lab at Redhill, Surrey.

Previously, laser-disc technology meant that interactive question-andanswer training programmes were available on PCs but their scope was limited.

Discs available initially in the UK will cover entertainment, education and information in four main areas: children's interest, music, games and special interest. Later titles will be introduced monthly. Philips believes some of its biggest Philips betteves some buyers will be parents with young children. Julie Davies, Marketing Manager of Philips Services Manager of Philips Interactive Media Systems, said: They will be the sort of parents who are interested in their children's development and education.

"With some of the discs, for instance, there is a certain amount of subliminal learning to help them with their numbers and their letters. The whole point is that it's fun - they are enjoying themselves.

"The potential for its future use is enormous. We are only only at the beginning of what people can do with the technology. It is limited only by people's imagination."

Philips's new CD-i system integrates sound, vision, computer games and the family album. Is it a great leap for mankind or another entry in the doomed gadget register?

kay, bung away that Nintendo. Chris sounds crap on it anyway. And sling away that CD player. Chris Rea sounds crap on it anyway, because he usually sounds crap. And kick out that video player, because let's face it, it doesn't work апуwау, and who stocks Betamax these days? You don't need any of them, because they're about to be replaced by one thing: Compact Disc Interactive (CD-i).

Feeling better, less weighed down by junk? Good, because soon your house will be emptier than the Gobi Desert, and you might as well get used to it. Your photo album can go, because from now on you're storing your snapshots on disc. Dump your copy of VOX, because eventually your magazines will appear on CD (you've fired - Ed). And throw out your dog, because you're nasty, cruel, and - once you've got into CD-i - you won't have money to spare for Pedigree Chum. Hey - don't cry. You can always pat the TV.

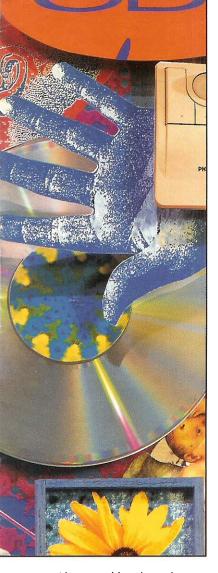

CD-i is intended to be the world's first fully integrated interactive entertainment system. It will show you visuals, play you music, and offer you education as well as mess up your brain with games. But you don't just sit there like an indolent couch potato with CD-i, you take part. Thanks to a joystick, a mouse or some other zapping device, you become an active and fully interactive couch potato. If you're the kind of sad person who wants to zoom in on your photos of the Greek nudist beach from last summer's holiday, you can. If your kids want to colour a bit of TV pink, there's no need to reach for the white spirit afterwards. If you want to play Battleships, there's no need to draw a grid on a piece of paper. And if you want your wife to have sex with your best friend, CD-Interactive will give you something to do while she's round at his place.

Okay, so you've heard it all before. Hardly a day goes by without the trumpeting of some amazing new technology that you don't know how you lived without ... for five minutes. And what's so new about games you can interact with? Anyone who's never heard of video games, kindly leave the page. Or bingo:

that's interactive, come to that. We all remember the Super 8 movie camera, the eight-track cartridge, the paddle tennis game.

We're all as cautious as hell when it comes to stumping up for new, unproven technology. Some of us haven't even got CD players yet, fearful of the back panel notices that say 'Class One Laser Product. Do not insert your willy into this machine.' But this is the clever thing about CD-i: while it's all totally new, somehow it isn't ...

Even though this new format is being heralded as a revolution in home entertainment, CD-i is basically the product of a large scale rationalisation programme. There's little here you can't do with other technologies, but not all at once, in one sleek, sexy little cabinet. Hence you get digital sound quality, as you'd expect from any CD player. You get visual sequences, as you'd expect from a LaserDisc system. You get computer games, although the titles aren't devastating - Connect 4, Pinball, Golf etc. However, the sound quality is far superior to anything your hand-held consoles can muster. You've long been able to put your photographs on a videotape, although you've not been able to juggle them around once they're on there (CD-i allows the sequencing of images, much the same as a CD allows you to shuffle tracks).

And of course 'paint' facilities and 'point and click' facilities are familiar from the world of computers. But in one lump for around £600? Now

A CD-i player plugs into your TV and hi-fi. It will play your CDs, even the embarrassing ones you bought when you were drunk. It will show you video programmes such as Cool Oldies Jukebox, in which James Brown and Jerry Butler appear on your TV screen at the same time as bumf and trivia about the artists and songs. It will offer you a chance to 'interview' Louis Armstrong on An American Songbook, although exactly how you're gonna interview ol' Satchmo without resort to a medium is hard to fathom. And there's Mother Goose Rhymes To Colour - but that's a bit too complicated for me. question is: do we need it?

To be frank, despite the capabilities of CD-I.

 The impetus for Compact Disc Interactive came from the computer industry. As Compact Disc took the music market by storm, the boffins began to realise its potential for storing loads of data. The problem was the computer industry's reputation for never being able to agree on anything. It took until 1985 for the idea of storing data other than music on CD to

In that year, Sony and Philips got together to agree the so-called Yellow Book standard, which laid down a fairly broad set of guidelines for a format which became known as CD-ROM-Compact Disc-Read Only Memory. A number of CD-ROM drives were introduced, but mixing computers and CD drives from different manufacturers proved a recipe for disaster, and only the most computer-literate console jockeys could extract the digits from the discs.

Obviously, this was no good to anyone. The need was for a format which could be understood and operated by the most technophobic and technologically illiterate. The solution was to significantly tighten standards, so that any disc could play in any machine, and in 1986 the Green Book standard for CD-I was agreed.

Although it took nearly five years for the first CD-I players to reach the market, this standard still rules, forming the basis for CD-l's promised multi-compatibility. The idea is very simple, and you don't need to know anything at all about computers or CD-I to get the best from the machines. In fact, the software is now the key to the whole shooting match; the hardware matters very little. All you have to

Not only that, but you will be able to interact with the video footage, so if you think Inspector Morse has asked all the wrong questions, you'll be able to tell him so and thus influence the outcome of the programme you are watching.

This is not sci-fi, and not as far off as it sounds. CD-I players are in the shops now, and FMV is promised by the end of the year. Perhaps 1992 will be the year when the much abused (and maligned) term 'multi-media' finally fulfils the promise it has held out for the last decade. Andy Benham corporate weight being slung behind it, CD-i may be a toughie to market. What is it? Is it a music system, a video system, a games machine or a computer? Maybe it offers too much. If you're an opera buff, you might well feel patronised by a CD of Pavarotti that translates 'Nessun Dorma' into English. If you've already spent £400 on a video recorder, you'll be reluctant to fork out for a playback device. And CD-i isn't (yet) as tasty as a Mac Classic computer.

Somehow CD-i must be sold as a total, all-embracing package. And for a world used to strict demarcation lines berween technologies, that's going to seem very odd indeed. However, if you're about to fork out for a mid-range CD player, you might as well get one of these. Philips (who else?) are clearly unafraid of new tech: they've launched the system in the UK six months earlier than advertised.

Is it a revolution in home entertainment? Probably not. Although it's interactive, it's not the same as being able to tell the participants in Question Time that they're talking a lot of tosh about the homeless.

In a couple of years, if the range of software titles expands at the rate it's intended to, maybe we can trot out the full orchestra to play a symphony or tootle a raspberry. In the meantime, anyone want to buy a Betamax video? And more to the point, has anyone seen my wife?

CD-i has to be seen to be believed!

That's why Philips is making CD-i available to as many people as possible for hands-on demonstrations - whether it be in the actual shops or at other related events.

During this autumn, CD-i is on show at 20 shopping centres nationwide in conjunction with the Department for Education's roadshow - bringing the curriculum to parents. A further 10 centres are scheduled for spring 1993.

The Future Entertainment Show promises to be a spectacular event where the latest CD-i titles will be available - so come and have a go! At Earls Court, London from 5 - 8 November 1992.

Without CD-i, you're only using half of it.

CD-i stands for 'Compact Disc, Interactive' and it makes your television exactly that, interactive. That means you can ask questions, play games, explore foreign countries, do a course on photography, even record your holiday snapshots, all on your own TV – definitely not something for couch potatoes. There's a huge range of CD-i discs stretching from golf at Palm Springs, for adults, all the way down to Sesame Street, for kids, and it all comes in something that looks like a compact disc player. Since it's also a top of the range CD player, you can plug it into your Hi-Fi and play all your existing CDs. There's so much to this incredible new system that the only way to really appreciate it is to try it out for yourself. You can find out where to see CD-i by calling the number opposite. Once you see a demonstration you'll realise that so far as television goes, you haven't seen the half of it.
