150 Greenwich Hospital Estates Vs The Duke of Northumberland: an important historical and legal archive relating to a court case between Greenwich Hospital Estates as Appellants and The Duke of Northumberland (initially through his bailiff Thomas Robson) as a defendant. The case first appeared at Northumberland Assizes of 1812, but unresolved, continued as a new trial in 1814. The origin of the case was a petty dispute over the extraction of limestone by Robson from Hareshaw Common, an area of wasteland in Northumberland adjacent to Bellingham. It escalated from there to the Rights of the Duke of Northumberland as Lord of the Manor of North Tindale and the Rights of the Greenwich Hospital Estates as Lord of the Manor of Wark within Tindale. This archive contains evidence given by numerous parties concerning the use of Hareshaw Common and the emerged acceptance by both parties that Greenwich Hospital Estates had the right to the soil and its use, and The Duke of Northumberland had the right to whatever lay beneath the soil. After considerable time and expense, the case returned to the petty argument as to whether, in the course of extracting coal from the land, the Duke could claim the limestone removed in order to get at the coal. Curated by James Hedley, these documents originate from the archives of Dickson, Archer and Thorp Solicitors, Alnwick; all contained in three purpose-made book pattern boxes.
