Abstract

The pathology collection located at the Rocky Mountain Research Station is fairly extensive. The oldest specimen in the collection was acquired in 1871; since then over 4,600 samples have been added. The data associated with the RMRS collection was converted from a card catalog to an electronic database, allowing greater flexibility in sorting and querying. The contents of this report include information on each specimen and are useful for identifying whether a more extensive search of the electronic database is appropriate, as well as historical reference material.

Pathology Collection of the Rocky Mountain Research Station

Introduction

A pathology collection can be a valuable resource as a tool for identifying newly collected specimens or a type reference to initially describe a new species. The documentation of when and where the pathogen was collected can be valuable as a description of suitable hosts and environments, as well as an historic record of occurrences.

The pathology collection located at the Rocky Mountain Research Station is fairly extensive. The oldest specimen in the collection was acquired in 1871; since then over 4600 samples have been added. Most of these are from the United States, but others came from Canada, Mexico, the Caribbean, South America, Europe, Asia, or northern Africa.

Usefulness of a collection is dependent on the ability to search through its contents. The data associated with the RMRS collection was converted from a card catalog to an electronic database in part so it could be queried by a number of variables simultaneously, such as host type and location. The flexibility of this system is a great improvement over a hard copy, which can only be sorted by one variable for each set of cards. This being said, the contents of this report are useful for identifying whether a more extensive search of the electronic database is appropriate, as well as historical reference material.

The records in this report are grouped by host, then pathogen, then state or country. Wherever possible, the collection data have been left as they were originally recorded, and therefore reflect the historic nature of the collection itself. This includes occasional misspellings, incorrect locations, and some blank fields. Here is a brief description of the information included in this report:

- Host—The species that the specimen was found on or in, sometimes recorded as unknown, or just to genus, but usually genus and species.
- Pathogen—The disease that was collected, sometimes recorded as unknown, or just to genus, but usually genus and species. This name has been kept as it was recorded when the specimen was collected, including occasional misspellings, although taxonomists have renamed many species since the collection date.
- Location—General to specific area the pathogen was collected, this often includes a nearby town or forest, or a prominent land feature such as a river or mountain.
- State/Country—A more general location where the pathogen was collected.
- Date—When the specimen was collected.
- Collector(s)—Who added the specimen to the collection.

Some of these specimens have had several name changes since being added to this collection. Nomenclature is in a constant state of revision as taxonomists reexamine the relationships among species and determine which characteristics to use in separating one from another. Assigning names in this environment amounts to creating a snapshot in time. While a current name has been included in the database where possible, this information can be expected to change over time, and will require periodic revisions. Some of the names in this collection have no current synonyms, and these specimens need to be reexamined by a taxonomist to be brought up to date.

The Rocky Mountain Research Station develops scientific information and technology to improve management, protection, and use of the forests and rangelands. Research is designed to meet the needs of National Forest managers, Federal and State agencies, public and private organizations, academic institutions, industry, and individuals.

Studies accelerate solutions to problems involving ecosystems, range, forests, water, recreation, fire, resource inventory, land reclamation, community sustainability, forest engineering technology, multiple use economics, wildlife and fish habitat, and forest insects and diseases. Studies are conducted cooperatively, and applications may be found worldwide.
