Abstract – A comprehensive checklist of cercosporoid hyphomycete species of 67 species now known from Poland is presented. The complete annotated list covers 32 Cercospora, 31 Passalora, two Stenella and two Pseudocercospora species.

Key words – mitosporic fungi, hyphomycetes

Introduction

Cercospora and allied genera are anamorphs of the ascomycetous genus Mycosphaerella Johanson (e.g., Braun & Melnik 1997, Kim & Shin 1998, Crous & Braun 2003). Since Cercospora was established by Fresenius (1863), the number of species assigned to this genus increased rapidly, followed by a significant expansion of its generic concept, including numerous Passalora-like fungi (Braun & Melnik 1997).

The first worldwide monograph of Cercospora Fresen. s. lat. was published by Chupp (1954). Later, Deighton (e.g., 1967, 1976), Braun (1995), Braun & Melnik (1997) and other authors narrowed the generic concept of Cercospora s. lat. and divided it into smaller units. Recently Crous & Braun (2003) recognized four true cercosporoid genera, viz. Cercospora, Pseudocercospora Speg., Passalora Fr. and Stenella Syd., and several other morphologically similar genera, based on molecular sequence analyses and a reassessment of morphological characters.

First reports of cercosporoid fungi collected in Poland date back to the late 19th-century, when Hennings (1892), Schroeter (1892, 1897) and Hellwig (1897) listed various fungal species found in the vicinity of the town of Świecie, in Lower Silesia, in the Sudeten Mts., and in the vicinity of the town of Września near Poznań, respectively. First studies in the 20th century, for example by Garbowski (1929, 1932, 1935), Garbowski & Juraszkówna (1933) and Leszczenko (1937), predominantly contained data on parasites of crop and ornamental plants. First records of cercosporoid fungi found in natural plant communities were published from the Tatra National Park (Starachowicz 1963), followed by collections from the Ojców and Pieniny National Parks (e.g. Kućmierz 1973, 1976b, 1977b), the Poleski and Białowieża National Parks (e.g. Mułenko 1988-1989, 1994a, b, 1996a), and recently from the Słowiński National Park (Adamska 2001). Studies by Danilkiewicz (1987, 1987-1990) conducted in the left-bank valley of the central Bug river provided valuable information on parasitic fungi in riparian communities.

Materials and methods

The list of cercosporoid fungi was complied using reports available in the literature. The species listed were usually recorded on living plant organs. Cercospora sp. collected on honeydew of Abies sp. represents an exception and is somewhat rather doubtful.

The fungal nomenclature and taxonomy follows Crous & Braun (2003). Species names used in the original publications, which deviate from those in the latter publication, are cited as synonyms. The host plant nomenclature follows Mirek et al. (2002).

Results

A list containing 32 species of the genus Cercospora, 31 species of Passalora and two species of Pseudocercospora as well as Stenella is given below. Cercospora species were collected on 46 host plants belonging to 33 genera and 17 families of both classes of the Magnoliophyta (Magnoliopsida, Liliopsida). The highest amounts of cercosporoid parasites were recorded on representatives of the Fabaceae (nine species), Brassicaceae (six), and Violaceae (four). Passalora species were collected on 92 host plants belonging to 58 genera and 19 families, including the Poaceae (with 25 species), Apiaceae (with 14 species), Rosaceae (with seven species), Onagraceae (with six species), Chenopodiaceae and Rubiaceae (with four species in each case), which represent the host plant families with most cercosporoid species. Only two species of Stenella and Pseudocercospora, respectively, are known from Poland, viz., S. lythri on Lythrum salicaria L., S. subsanguinea on Maianthemum bifolium (L.) F.W. Schmidt, P. geicola on Geum montanum L. and P. opuli on Viburnum opulus L.
